

I am writing to you from the Indigenous Support and Awareness team at Agriculture and Agri-Food Canada (AAFC). I am a second year Kanien'kehá:ka student at Queen's University and have been working as a Project Officer with AAFC since summer 2018. Currently, we are looking to recruit more Indigenous summer students for 2019.

Some of the available student positions include:

- research assistants for science and field work based jobs in livestock, crops, soil, food science
- general labourers for farm/research centre maintenance
- junior IT technicians for IM/IT positions such as help desk support and network and software administration
- junior economists, and administrative support for office based positions, these also provide great opportunities to gain work experience for general arts and commerce students

We are hoping that we may be able to come visit your Indigenous student centre to give a short presentation and information about our program as well as provide lunch to the students who attend. We have great jobs for students at offices and research centres across the country, both for summer employment opportunities as well as future careers.

We strongly encourage students to apply now to FSWEP, RAP and co-op for summer opportunities via Canada.ca/GCJobs. For more information on how to apply please visit <https://www.canada.ca/en/public-service-commission/jobs/services/recruitment/students/federal-student-work-program.html>.

You can contact Erle (erle.einarsson@canada.ca) to make arrangements for a presentation.
